

The social media workshops changed my view of Twitter, it offers potential for getting the message out.

The Internet censorship workshop taught me how little redress there is for police action in shutting down websites.

The data detox workshop taught me to be aware of apps on my mobile and what they are accessing.

The social media workshop taught me the importance of integrating different types of social media in a campaign.

The day reminded me that security is an ongoing process.

The Wordpress workshops left me feeling that Wordpress is complex.

The data detox workshop gave me better ideas for researching what I need to know about mobile-phone settings.

I understand how much more there is still to learn.

I learned to use Memes (on Facebook).

We need self-help groups to bring more activists up to speed with these tech' skills.

It was great to find out that I can use #hashtags on Facebook, not only Twitter.
